GoOfflineMap - Free download and offline map from TomTom.It was recently revealed that President Donald Trump launched another attack against the idea of regulating cryptocurrencies in an op-ed published for the Daily Caller. In the op-ed, Trump specifically defended the 2018 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, which included major cuts to corporate tax rates. In the article, he wrote: While some say that these actions will affect inflation, all they will really do is force the U.S. Treasury to pay interest on our outstanding debt and ultimately make U.S. debt more expensive for the average American taxpayer. Such a burden, by the way, is not exactly “pro-growth.” Presumably, the president was arguing that the corporate tax cuts will spur economic growth, thus increasing the tax revenues the federal government receives from private corporations. However, Trump also made the common claim that the cuts will help to reduce the debt and fiscal deficits. In his article, Trump appears to be a supporter of the blockchain, which he believes is “one of the most revolutionary technologies since the Internet.” Interestingly, his op-ed has been promoted with a link to Chainlink’s website, which says: This is how the decentralized internet works: coders link smart contracts directly to each other and data sources. Chainlink allows businesses to securely exchange data between different blockchain-based applications without writing their own code or using an intermediary to perform the data exchange. By building on the Chainlink decentralized oracle network, applications can securely connect to data providers and automate trade finance, supply chain, contract management, cross-asset settlement and other applications. The op-ed, which was written by Trump, also appears
